RECTORS AND FELLOWS OF EXETER COLLEGE OXFORD BETWEEN 1901 AND 2005

The aim of this biographical list has been to name the rectors and fellows who were in post in 1901 or later (but excluding honorary, emeritus and visiting fellows), to arrange the fellows elected after 1901 by their year of admission<sup>1</sup> to the fellowship and within each year by seniority, and to include for each rector and fellow as much as I could discover of the following, grouped as follows:

- full name, life span, Oxford degrees, class or type of fellowship, major College offices (Lecturer, Tutor<sup>2</sup>, Sub-Rector, Bursar, Chaplain, Senior Tutor) with dates<sup>3</sup>, any concurrent University appointment (placed in brackets), and the year of vacating the rectorship or fellowship (but I don't say whether that was by resignation, retirement or, in the case of fixed-term fellowships held throughout their term, time-expiry);
- whether the rector or fellow was an old member of the College, subsequently became an emeritus or honorary fellow, or has a portrait in College;
- other career information, including outside and later Oxford degrees, major honours and awards<sup>4</sup>, selected previous and subsequent appointments<sup>5</sup>, honorary degrees, honorary fellowships at other Oxford and at Cambridge colleges;
- my major sources of information (other than the University Calendar and the College archives, which were used throughout).

Publications are excluded, but I have made an exception for the two rectorial autobiographies, and for some pages of Madariaga. Titles in brackets, and Oxford degrees in the third section, were conferred after the rectorship or fellowship ended. Honorary fellows, visiting fellows, and office-holders who were not fellows are listed only if they also served as fellows. Fellows might be admitted and vacate at any time of year; after about 1950 1 October to 30 September became usual. There is an alphabetical index at the end.

At the beginning of the period the College was governed under statutes made in 1882 'by the University of Oxford Commissioners acting in pursuance of the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge Act, 1877.' These provided that the Governing Body consist of the Rector and two classes of fellows, Tutorial and Ordinary. A tutorial fellow's tenure was conditional on his 'taking such part in the educational work of the College as the Educational Council [roughly the Rector and tutorial fellows] may from time to time determine' (Statute III); ordinary fellowships were often held by research fellows. The number of fellowships was to be not less than twelve (reduced in 1921 to <sup>1</sup> 'Admission' is not strictly accurate. Until about 1975 many Fellows started as 'probationary' and might not be formally admitted as 'actual' Fellows until up to a year later. I have aimed to date the Fellowship from the start of its probationary period.

<sup>2</sup> But only until 1965, after which the office of Tutor ceased to be distinctive and potent among Fellow-Lecturers.

<sup>3</sup> But I have ignored most of the short periods during which one Fellow deputised for another on leave or filled a temporary vacancy.

nine), and had to include a Chaplain Fellow —explicitly counted as tutorial—and at least three (after 1921 at most two) ordinary fellows; but fellowships could be suspended with the consent of the Visitor, and in fact there were fewer than twelve throughout the period 1901–21. Tutors, normally chosen from among the tutorial fellows, had the duty to ‘devote themselves to the Educational work of the College, and to exercise....supervision over the conduct and studies of all Members of the College receiving tuition’ (Statute IV). Tutorial fellows might also hold the office of lecturer: the ‘number and duties’ of lecturers ‘shall be regulated from time to time by the Educational Council’ (ib.). Statute IV provided for two bursars, but allowed their offices to be merged in one person. Until (apparently) 1915 the rectorship was tenable for life; thereafter to 75. Tutorial fellowships were tenable for fifteen years but the fellows were re-eligible from time to time, without age limit until 1896, thereafter up to the age of 70; if unmarried at election, they could not marry for seven years, but this provision had disappeared by 1921. Ordinary fellowships were tenable for seven years, but could be renewed under certain conditions provided they became non-stipendiary.

From 1926 these arrangements were considerably altered by Commissioners acting under the Oxford and Cambridge Act 1923. The Governing Body was henceforth to contain three classes of fellow: Professorial, Official and Research. Professorial fellowships were tenable by professors and readers of the University and their equivalent, and were non-stipendiary. Official fellowships were ‘tenable by persons holding any teaching or administrative or disciplinary office in the College, including the office of Chaplain’, and at first also by University lecturers, demonstrators, and inter-collegiate lecturers (see below) even if they held no College office (Statute III). Research fellowships were either Senior, tenable for five years, or Junior, tenable for three years (ib.). There was no limit on numbers, but official fellows might not be outnumbered by the other Governing Body fellows. An amendment approved by the Queen in Council in 1965 provided also for Fellowships by Special Election, tenable ‘by Persons holding a teaching or research or administrative post in the University qualifying them for membership of Congregation’ but not qualified to hold a professorial fellowship, and also others ‘who have attained, or who show promise of attaining, distinction in some branch or branches of knowledge, and who shall undertake to perform some definite educational work in the College....’ (Statute III). Among the offices qualifying for election to an official fellowship were those of tutor, lecturer, chaplain and bursar. The duty of tutors was ‘to exercise direct supervision over the conduct and course of study and general welfare’ of undergraduates assigned to them; a later amendment dropped the word ‘direct’, and later still the name ‘Tutor’ was replaced by ‘Adviser’. Lecturerships became the main stipendiary office of most official fellows (thereby called, in the common Oxford parlance, ‘tutorial fellows’); Statute IV provided that ‘the Lecturers shall perform such duties of tuition and lecturing as may be assigned to them by the Tutorial Board [Rector and Official Fellows]’ or (by a later amendment) ‘the Governing Body’. The rectorship was tenable to the age of 70, or 75 by Governing Body resolution; later this was reduced to 67, in line with University appointments. Official fellows were elected for periods of up to ten years, and were re-eligible to the retiring age of 65 (67 for those retiring after about 1945 and, in most cases, elected before about 1975).

During the period a good deal of College teaching was in the hands of lecturers who were not fellows of the College. This underclass (as it often was, unless the lecturers were fellows of other colleges) diminished greatly between 1950 and 1980, but grew again thereafter. Its size depended mainly on the number of University appointments that were available for fellows to hold, which greatly affected the cost to the College of maintaining a teaching fellow. Throughout the period fellows might, with the College’s permission, hold University appointments concurrently, but under the 1882 Statutes few tutorial fellows did so. Independently, however, of University initiative or employment, there had been increasing cooperation among colleges in the provision of lectures, and it is likely that by 1926 most of the College’s tutorial fellows (except in the natural sciences, modern languages and English) were ‘Inter-Collegiate Lecturers’, admitting students from every other college to their lectures. From that date the University intervened, keeping registers of ‘Faculty Lecturers’ and providing for ‘stipends of University Lectureships to be conferred upon Inter-Collegiate Lecturers whose names are on’ those registers (University Statutes 1926 p.332). The title of ‘Faculty Lecturer’ appeared in the University Calendar for the first time in 1938, but it is not clear whether all who held it were in receipt of such stipends. These stipends, always modest and supplementary, were paid from the University’s Common University Fund (CUF; originally set up under the 1882 University Statutes to support new University posts, and initially funded from taxation of colleges). From 1946, thanks in great part to growing subvention from the State, the University was able to apply the CUF towards remuneration of more, and from 1950 all, of these faculty lecturers, and thus in effect to tutorial fellows throughout the colleges (and indeed to some others; History viii 652–3). From that date they appear below as ‘CUF Lecturers’, in distinction from ‘University Lecturers’ (predominantly in the natural sciences), who continued to receive a full University stipend, albeit lightly subvented by the College (the title of ‘Faculty Lecturer’ was later applied to certain University posts intermediate between University and CUF Lecturerships). Although CUF lectureships<sup>6</sup> were always supplementary to college posts, the University duties attached to them, and the University’s control over appointment to them, grew in the latter part of the period. After State grants to the University began to decline in the 1980s, some fellowships came to be associated with ‘titular’ University lectureships (mainly CUF), held without University stipend or contractual duties. In the earlier part of the period professors’ assistants in the natural sciences were often called Demonstrators, but the title was generally merged into ‘Lecturer’ during the 1960s, as also was that of Senior Research Officer. Until 1925 all fellowships, and thereafter all official and junior research fellowships, in the College were probationary during the first year, but after about 1950 probation was increasingly waived and by the 1980s had fallen into disuse. From 1996 the University annually invited members of Congregation to apply for ‘recognition of distinction’; those awarded such recognition (which was unremunerated) are noted below as ‘non-statutory reader’ or ‘non-statutory professor’.

The major changes in fellows’ statutory conditions of tenure during the period came, therefore, in 1926. But even at the statutory level other changes had occurred from time to time, as amendments passed by the Governing Body secured approval from the University and the King or Queen in Council. In 1979 women were admitted to membership of the College, at every level. The Education Reform Act 1988 led to imposition by Commissioners of a statute concerning the dismissal of ‘Academic Staff’, applicable to any person, amongst others, ‘employed by the College to carry out teaching or research’ which was not ‘only of a limited nature’. The number of fellows grew steadily during the period; in 2005 there were forty-one.

As I have worked on the list that follows, I have come to see how much history it leaves to be investigated. The careers described here are no more than skeletons; among the things I have not recorded, schooling would have been interesting. The non-fellow lecturers of the College also deserve commemoration; but I have declined the huge labour of tracing them—except the few, such as myself, who progressed to a fellowship.

A draft was submitted to all past and present rectors and fellows for whom I could find a current e-mail or other address. My thanks are due to them for corrections and amplifications, not only in their own entries; and also to Juliet Chadwick and John Maddicott in Exeter, Anna Petre and Nicholas Smith of the University Archives, John Taylor of the Royal Society of Chemistry, Charline Addison
